The sunny side of stuff

Autumn in the city means design festivals bubbling to the surface in fast and furious fashion. DAMn° travelled to several of these prime places in order to spot fresh design — while the paint and glue were not yet dry. Sojourns to Paris, London, Brussels and Oslo revealed that indeed there are newly designed objects out there that are worth writing home about.

COPY BY KUENG CAPUTO

The market for design objects is small and exclusive – only copies make them suitable for mass consumption. Despite apparent close similarities, deciding attributes are often lost in the process. Such copies insult the original, even if at heart they pay a compliment to the original idea. “Copy by Kueng Caputo” explores the limits of plagiarism, with much respect and a touch of irony. A selection of current design objects, exhibited at DMY Berlin, serve as the raw material. Each of the design trophies is closely observed, analyzed, and virtually dismantled, in order to recognize its specific character. On the one hand, the attempt to copy an original provides creative inspiration. On the other, the process aims at filtering out a significant aspect of a chosen object in order to exaggerate and honour it. The dialogue between original and copy thus represents an homage to the authors. And the originality of the copy reveals how inspiring such a discourse can be.

WÒ YÓU: BEIJING & SHANGHAI - TRAVELOGUES IN DESIGN

An exhibition showing the creative research of China based designers and studios as inspired by the urban cultures of its greatest cities, Beijing and Shanghai. The China Design Market project aims at fostering dialogue on the goals of sustainability in design today, providing insight on the role and responsibility of China's own global cities in responding firmly and in a timely way to the economic and cultural demands of a world in transition.
